Editorial

Palliative Care---A Noble and Holistic Specialty

Marie Joseph
Honorary senior lecturer, St George’s university of London, St Raphael’s Hospice, 801, London Road, North Cheam, Surrey, United Kingdom

Introduction

A patient’s suffering from any illness is ‘total’ combining the physical with the emotional. The entire human being is involved in this process. This process is even more acutely experienced by the patient with an incurable, terminal illness for example cancer or an organ failure.

Yet, traditionally physicians have considered the physical domain more importantly over the psychological domain. Sadly in the Cartesian dualism, body and mind were considered as separate entities and yet they are inter-twinned [1].

Palliative care embraces the golden principle of maximizing quality of life and offering comfort and dignity in the dying stage of the patient [2]. It aims to provide expert symptom management coupled with empathy in caring. The patient’s relatives are taken into consideration in the entire care process and in the patient’s illness trajectory [3,4].

Palliative care integrates with other specialties, most notably with oncology in the care of patients with cancer. For best patient management, there should be early integration between these two specialties[5]. It is well recognized that excellent pain relief enables the patient to receive oncological care more effectively.

Psychological care of the patient with breast cancer can positively impact on their survival [6]. Again there is benefit shown with psycho-therapy in the context of patients with gastro-intestinal malignancy [7].

Palliative care therefor is truly ‘holistic’ looking at the entire human being with its physical, emotional, spiritual and social domains. It is provided by a multi-disciplinary team of care professionals. The word ‘holistic’ is derived from the word ‘holy’ thus making it also noble.

References

*Corresponding author: Marie Joseph, Medical Director and Lead consultant in Palliative MedicineSpecialist in neuropathic pain relief, Accredited RCP Educator, Honorary senior lecturer, St George’s university of London, St Raphael’s Hospice, 801, London Road, North Cheam, Surrey, United Kingdom, Fax: +44 (0) 208 099 1724; Tel: +44 (0)208 099 7777; E-mail: mariejoseph@straphaels.org.uk

Citation: Marie Joseph, (2017) Palliative Care---A Noble and Holistic Specialty. BAOJ Pall Medicine 3: 040.

Copyright: © 2017 Marie Joseph. This is an openaccess article distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution License, which permits unrestricted use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided the original author and source are credited.